“Viognier is an unusual grape from the Rhône Valley of France that has grown in popularity among American winemakers in the past decade as part of a general interest in Rhône varietals -- and a specific interest in alternatives to Chardonnay. At its best, Viognier can have the cleanliness of Riesling, the juiciness of Sauvignon Blanc and the orange-blossom charm of Muscat. It tends to taste of peaches, apricots and mango, and sometimes has a bit of weight.”

“Zesty. Bursting with ripe fruit and real stuff. Lovely nose. Alive, balanced and pretty exciting. A wine that says, ‘I’m different and I’m cool.’”
